Guidance to Hosts

- At this time, the University does not require students to be tested for COVID-19 before participating in clinical rotations.
- However, all students working in off-site clinics will fill out a daily online attestation form indicating whether they are experiencing Covid-19 symptoms. Anyone with potential symptoms will be contacted by the University's occupational health nurse.
- The University requires all students who think they might have Covid-19 symptoms, or been exposed to a positive case, or receive a positive COVID-19 test result to self-report to the University through an online form.
- After a self-report, the CU Anschutz Occupational Health Nurse will contact the student within 24 hours.
- When a case is determined to be potentially positive or positive, the student is expected to contact the student's preceptor AND the host. If a student does not inform their preceptor and host, the University will inform the preceptor and host.
- The University's occupational health nurse will contact all who have been in close contact with the student who is positive.
- In light of the severity of the pandemic, the University also encourages hosts and host families to inform a student if the hosts or host families are determined to be potentially positive or positive for COVID-19.
- If a student, host, or host family is positive, the next steps will be made on a case-by-case basis. The student, host, host family, University program representative, occupational health nurse and AHEC representatives will work together to determine the best course of action.
- We recognize that each situation is different, and we recognize that there may be situations beyond a student, host or host family's control. This includes, but is not limited to, situations in which a student must leave a host home, a host home may require additional cleaning, etc. The University is committed to being a good partner through this process, so should those situations arise, please contact the AHEC Executive Director or email COAHECHousing@cuanschutz.edu.
