LGBTQ+ people have been historically marginalized and historically underserved in health care settings. Transgender Americans in particular face unique stigma and discrimination in Health Care environments. Health disparities magnify the impact COVID-19 has had on LGBTQ+ community. And in the wake of a pandemic, we have seen how some ways of adapting patient care has created new avenues in connecting LGBTQ+ communities to care. Join us for a conversation about the impact of COVID-19 and the care provided for LGBTQ+ communities during this time.

Presented by Andrew Miller, MA

Andrew Miller (he/him/his) provides training, consultation, and capacity building assistance through the Denver Health's LGBTQ Center of Excellence. Specializing in Transgender and Gender Expansive affirming care. Andrew provides trainings spanning across medical systems, public health departments, academic settings, and community-based non-profit programming.

After graduating with a Master's in Multicultural Clinical Counseling in 2019, Andrew combined his over ten years of national training experience with his passion for creating accessible affirming clinical settings and has focused his work towards medical and public health settings.

When not at work, Andrew can be found outside in the mountains on an adventure with his dog.
